WEIL TALKS ON FEEDING STEERS

Interesting Observations of Big Lexington Buyer At Farmers' Meeting Last Week

During Farmers' Week at Lexington last week, Jonas Weil, the big and well known cattle buyer and feeder, read a very interesting paper on the cattle trade during the year, with some observations on feeding cattle for market, which was of much interest to every farmer who handles cattle of any sort. Mr. Weil's paper was as follows:

The year just ended will remain a memorable one in the history of the cattle trade. The year started with extremely low prices for the first five months; then came record high prices, for grass cattle during June, July, August and September, steadily declining prices finishing the year at the low point of the season, causing big losses to every one unfortunate enough to have cattle for sale. Shall not this costly experience teach the cattle feeders of Kentucky the oft-told lesson of preparing and feeding cattle during the winter months a sufficient quantity of corn, so that they will be in an advanced, good-freshed condition by the time they are turned into the pasture, about the first of May, leaving no doubt of their grazing good and fat for July, August or September market? Nine times out of ten this is the best time in the year for selling our grass cattle, being the time when the western corn belt states have marketed their winter and spring fed cattle, and before the western range cattle season starts.

One gentleman who disposed of a nice quality lot of cattle in the past month at an unsatisfactory price, said to me: "Hereafter I shall feed my cattle better in the winter and have them ready for the summer market, so that I will be in a position to 'shoot the bear as soon as he comes out of the woods'."

The great trouble the cattle trade in Kentucky had the past year was the poor and unsatisfactory condition cattle were marketed in. With few exceptions, their percentage of dressing out was the lowest and the most unsatisfactory for many years. All this has been caused by not feeding a sufficient amount of corn during the winter months. Conditions in the past few years have steadily grown worse, beginning with the advent of the silo. Those that have silos, scarcely feeding little if any corn, and, of course, cattle wintered on silage principally, with just a little cotton-seed meal added, can never graze fat. I know some of my friends will say: "Why do silage-fed cattle make a fair gain if they don't fatten?" The answer is they grow bigger as they grow older hence the gain, but they don't get fat, causing their miserable dressing percentage. Not only has the silage feeder failed to produce good fat cattle off grass but he had his influence on those feeders of cattle that have no silos and are still feeding corn through the winter. When the corn feeder saw the inexpensive method by which his silage neighbor carried cattle through the winter he also reduced his feed bills, feeding only half enough corn. Right here I blame the cattle buyers, as they pay as much for silage-wintered, half fat grass cattle as they would pay for corn-fed, wintered-grass cattle; hence the letting up of good feeding by the corn feeder. These half-fat, so-called good grass cattle, dressing fifty to fifty-three per cent, have brought the entire fat cattle industry in Kentucky into disrepute. It is the main cause of bringing about the three per cent shrinkage method into Kentucky. The packers, buying cattle in the west, dressing fifty-six to sixty-two per cent in comparison to our so-called good ones, puts us into a very undesirable class, and as one head buyer of a large concern recently said to me: "I would just as soon have Colorado rangers as Kentucky grass cattle."

Cattle having a low dressing percentage are necessarily considered of poor quality, and can only command poor prices. If we are to command good and satisfactory prices, both at home and on the market, we must make our cattle good and useful, or else the time will come when we can not sell them at home at satisfactory prices, and whenever the time comes that Kentucky cattle will have to be shipped to market from $3 to $5 per head will be wasted in comparison to our present method of selling direct from pasture or feed lot to the slaughter houses of the large eastern cities. When I refer to a difference of $3 to $5 a head, I have in mind added freight, stockyards charges, commissions and feed bill, including shrinkage while in transit. It is not my intention to offer or lay down any rule to feed cattle. But one thing is positive, that no good fat cattle can be produced off grass unless they have at least been fed from six to eight barrels of corn through the winter months.

Now in order not to be misunderstood about silage, I wish to say that I believe that silage has a place in beef production, and that good fat cattle can be made economically when fed silage, plenty of corn and cotton-seed meal. I further believe that young thin cattle can be wintered on silage to advantage, but I will state again that cattle principally fed on silage through the winter will not graze fat, and can only be made good fat cattle by feeding corn in the fall.

Now, in conclusion, I will say it is not my intention to criticize any one's method of feeding, nor do I intend to advise every one to feed the same kind or sell at the same time, but to advise to feed cattle better and make them more useful, and, remember, it can not be done with concrete and machinery—it takes corn to make good fat cattle.

Let us resolve to do better in the future and recover the prestige which Kentucky formerly held as a producer of good fat cattle.
